WIDOWHOOD Workshop

Who should attend a Widowhood Workshop? Widows and widowers, right? Of course, but who else? How about married people? If a person chooses to marry they are at risk of becoming widowed. No married person lives forever in this world. When a married person dies, somebody is left behind. Then there are those who will be getting married. If those people follow through with their marriage plans they automatically expose themselves to the possibility of becoming a widow. If we see the value to preparing before marriage, don't you think we should understand the value of preparing for widowhood. Then there are those who desire to exercise pure and undefiled religion (Ja. 1:27) by striving to be effective servants of those who have lost their marital mates. Maybe a better question is "Who should not attend a widowhood workshop?"

Widowhood is not a popular topic for understandable reasons. It is not wise, though, to ignore or deny the need to address this life circumstance. Everyday there are people who lose their spouse and are faced with the challenge of being single, again. Is there life after loss? Frankly, it doesn't feel like it some days. Can we avoid becoming a causality of our tragic circumstances when our mate passes away? Is there anything we can do to help people we know who are living this challenge? It is about time we address the issues, don't you think?

The Widowhood Workshop is designed to promote thought and discussion about one of the more difficult life circumstances a person can face. There will be a determined effort to emphasize the divine perspective about this experience. Hopefully, it will help prepare future widows and widowers as well as those who wish to serve them.
