1964 World Book Encyclopedia

Recently I was loaned a complete set of 1964 World Book Encyclopedias. The set is in pristine condition and immediately sent me to my childhood, a time when encyclopedias were the premier source of information for history, literature, geography, governments, agriculture - basically all the things we now ask Alexa and Siri.

As I thumbed through the volumes, I mused at how much has changed over the past 60 years. When these volumes appeared, John F Kennedy had just recently been assassinated and Lyndon B Johnson sworn in as the 36th President of the USA. The moon was still devoid of human presence, the internet was but a promising twinkle in its founders' various eyes, and Martin Cooper (from Motorola) was still 9 years away from the unveiling of his first wireless cell phone prototype.

Since these events, computers, cell phones and AI have taken over our existence and we can no longer imagine life without them. These world-shattering inventions have all happened in my lifetime, so in this ever-changing world, it is very comforting to "hold to God's unchanging hand" - to know that "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday and today and forever" (Hebrews 13:8).
